

The use of probability theory is now recognized as an important scientific method for studying subjective evidence. Religion is subjective, hence, difficult to study. The author has provided a way, that has not been done before, to study the Mormon religion. He uses Bayes probability theorem to determine the divinity of Mormonism. The theorem is applied to Mormon evidence and evidence critical of it to determine the likelihood or probability of divinity. This goal is achieved by: (1) Identifying advances in science affecting Mormon ideology. (2) Explaining why many Mormons espouse metaphysical certainty. (3) Discovering the sociological, psychological and theological underpinnings of Mormonism. (4) Using modern evidentiary methods to determine likelihood. (5) Establishing religious positions from which to view Mormonism. (6) Gathering and quantifying the evidence. (7) Presenting the findings and inferences. (8) Identifying a reasonable Mormon position to take. (9) Critiquing Mormonism based on the evidence. The book achieves these objectives. At the April, 2003 General Conference, Prophet Gordon B. Hinkley said each of us has to face the matter -- either the church is true or it is a fraud. There is no middle ground. It is the church and kingdom of God or it is nothing. The prophet seems wrong about this. This study alleges there is a middle ground. The evidence did not prove the church to be factually true or factually false. It proved that the church may be true at a moderately low level of likelihood. This finding would support the religious position, believer based on faith.
